Introduction

Virginia's landmarks are unparalleled resources, illuminating the culture and history of America from 16,000 B.C. to the present. The Commonwealth of Virginia encourages preserving and protecting Virginia's historic, architectural, and archaeological sites. Much of the state's appeal and significant income are derived from these resources. Our landmarks serve both as a major tool for urban renewal and as a key element of the state's multi-billion-dollar tourism industry.

Historic properties give communities a sense of identity and stability, adding richness to their quality of life. These historic places—the houses, stores, train stations, warehouses, iron furnaces, canals, landscapes, and bridges—are woven into the fabric of our daily lives. They are a part of what shapes the unique character and spirit of each community. Together, they define this place we call Virginia, and us as Virginians.

Preserving these resources greatly contributes to the vitality of our cities, towns, and villages, and ensures that reminders of our heritage will remain for future generations. The Virginia Department of Historic Resources administers the state and federal register programs that identify and recognize our cultural resources: the Virginia Landmarks Register and the National Register of Historic Places. The Department actively seeks public involvement in the registration process.

This booklet is designed to answer property owners' questions about the register programs. It describes how the programs came into being, the benefits of listing in the registers, the process of evaluation and nomination, the kinds of historic districts, and the rights of property owners. The booklet also contains a question and answer section, a glossary, and appendices.

For several decades, the national and state register programs have encouraged property owners voluntarily to protect Virginia's historic places. Thousands of Virginians have asked to list their properties on these honor rolls, in hopes that the owners who come after them may be likewise encouraged. The Department of Historic Resources applauds private stewardship and strives to give property owners the information and incentives to succeed. If you wish to be a part of this enterprise, please visit our web site at www.dhr.state.va.us, call (804) 367-2323, or write the Virginia Department of Historic Resources at 2801 Kensington Avenue, Richmond, VA 23221.

National Register of Historic Places

In early 1966, the Virginia General Assembly established the Virginia Historic Landmarks Commission, one of the first preservation offices in the country.

Later that year, the U.S. Congress passed the National Historic Preservation Act. The act created the National Register of Historic Places as the official list of structures, sites, objects, and districts that embody the "historical and cultural foundations of the nation." It named the National Park Service, in the Department of the Interior, to manage the register. The Keeper of the National Register of Historic Places is responsible for listing eligible properties.

To carry out its provisions, the act authorized the creation of a State Historic Preservation Office and a State Review Board in every state and territory. In Virginia, the day-to-day activities of the State Historic Preservation Office were carried out by the Virginia Historic Landmarks Commission and its staff. Since 1989, the State Historic Preservation Officer and a professional staff of architectural historians, architects, archaeologists, historians, and policy and administrative specialists have comprised the Virginia Department of Historic Resources, the successor to the Virginia Historic Landmarks Commission. The Governor of Virginia appoints the State Historic Preservation Officer, who in turn appoints the members of the State Review Board.

Since 1966, nearly 100,000 historic buildings, sites, structures, objects, and districts have been listed in the National Register of Historic Places nationwide, frequently on the initiative of their owners. (This figure is approaching 1,000,000 contributing buildings within the districts.) In Virginia alone, several thousand resources of all types are listed in the National Register. (Nearly 50,000 contributing properties lie within districts.)

The National Register of Historic Places continues to reflect the desire of Americans, as expressed in the National Historic Preservation Act, that "the historical and cultural foundations of the nation should be preserved as a living part of our community life and development in order to give a sense of orientation to the American people."

Listing in the National Register may qualify property owners for federal tax credits or other benefits administered by the Virginia Department of Historic Resources. Listing does not restrict or prevent an owner from altering, tearing down, or otherwise disposing of the property. Nor does listing dictate what an owner must do. Rather, listing recognizes the property's importance and invites its preservation. Although any person may propose a nomination to the register, properties may not be listed in the National Register over the objection of the owner, or, in the case of a historic district, a majority of the owners (see Rights of Owners to Comment and/or Object to Listing in the National Register and the Virginia Landmarks Register).

The Virginia Department of Historic Resources actively seeks the early participation of owners in the registration process. Department staff apprises owners and local officials, as well as owners of adjacent properties, of any proposed nomination. This written notification is required by state and federal law (see Evaluation Process and Nomination Process).

The department provides matching grants for surveys of cities, counties, and towns to identify cultural resources and recommend properties for registration. In the survey archives, the register program staff keeps records of places of statewide or national significance under a variety of cultural themes. These themes include:

Agricultural/Subsistence
Government/Law/Political
Health Care/Medicine
Education
Military/Defense
Religion
Social

Virginia Landmarks Register

The Virginia General Assembly created the Virginia Landmarks Register when it established the Virginia Historic Landmarks Commission in 1966 and authorized the commission to list eligible properties in the register. Today, the Board of Historic Resources, the successor to the Virginia Historic Landmarks Commission, has that authority.

The Board of Historic Resources and the State Review Board use the same criteria to evaluate properties for eligibility. Each property that the State Review Board considers for the National Register of Historic Places is likewise considered by the Board of Historic Resources for listing in the Virginia Landmarks Register. The same form is used to nominate a property to both registers.

Listing in the Virginia Landmarks Register conveys information, confers honor, and heightens awareness. The register gives owners access to the Virginia Preservation Easement and Technical Assistance programs. It may also qualify owners for state tax credits. Like the National Register listing, the Virginia Register does not restrict or prevent an owner from altering, tearing down, or otherwise disposing of the property. Rather, listing recognizes the property's importance and invites its preservation. In the words of the Code of Virginia, it is "an act of official recognition designed (i) to educate the public to the significance of the designated resource and (ii) to encourage local governments and property owners to take the designated property's historic, architectural, archaeological and cultural significance into account in their planning, the local government comprehensive plan and their decision making." Listing does not "regulate the action of local governments or property owners with regard to the designated property." Properties may not be listed in the Virginia Landmarks Register over the objections of the owner, or, in the case of historic districts, a majority of the owners (see Rights of Owners to Comment and/or Object to Listing in the National Register and the Virginia Landmarks Register). Most properties listed in the register were nominated at the initiative of the owners.

The Virginia Department of Historic Resources actively seeks the early participation of owners in the registration process. Department staff appraises owners and local officials, as well as owners of adjacent properties, of any proposed nomination. This written notification is required by state law (see Evaluation Process and Nomination Process).

National Historic Landmark Program

The National Historic Landmark program is older than either the National Register of Historic Places or the Virginia Landmarks Register. It was created in 1960 by the National Park Service; the secretary of the Interior designates National Historic Landmarks. Once so named, a National Historic Landmark also will be listed in the National Register of Historic Places, if it is not already.

Typically, National Park Service staff identifies National Historic Landmarks through studies of historical themes, although properties of national significance may be proposed by other sources. More than 2,000 sites in the United States have been termed National Historic Landmarks, among them the Alamo in Texas, the Frank Lloyd Wright Home and Studio in Illinois, and the Wright Brothers National Memorial in North Carolina. More than 100 Virginia properties, including 12 historic districts, have been named National Historic Landmarks between 1960 and 2000. This is more than twice the average number of National Historic Landmarks in any other state.

Many of America's most important architectural, archeological, and historical treasures are found in Virginia. Virginia's National Historic Landmarks include such national treasures as Monticello and Mount Vernon. They also include many lesser-known landmarks, such as the modest Arlington home of Dr. Charles Richard Drew, whose pioneering work in the use of blood plasma helped save thousands of lives in World War II, and the Egyptian Building in Richmond, regarded as the first example of Egyptian Revival architecture in the nation. Others include Fort Monroe in Hampton, Monumental Church in Richmond, Sailor's Creek Battlefield in Amelia County, Natural Bridge in Rockbridge County, and the Thunderbird Archeological District in Warren County. As with listing in the National Register of Historic Places and the Virginia Landmarks Register, naming a property a National Historic Landmark carries with it no restrictions. Listing recognizes the property's national importance and welcomes its preservation. Properties may not be designated National Historic Landmarks over the objections of the owner, or, in the case of historic districts, a majority of the owners.

Cape Henry Lighthouse, Virginia Beach

Districts

The National Park Service defines a district as “a significant concentration, linkage, or continuity of sites, buildings, structures, or objects united historically or aesthetically by plan or physical development.”

The boundaries of districts listed in the National Register of Historic Places and the Virginia Landmarks Register are identical. They are drawn using the same criteria. Because a local historic preservation ordinance may include other criteria, the boundaries of a locally designated district may differ from those of a state or National Register district.

Boundaries are drawn to include the greatest number of resources that add, or contribute, to the significance of the district. There will often be properties within the district that are noncontributing. Since the concept of a historic district precludes its looking like a doughnut or a slice of Swiss cheese, noncontributing properties are within the boundaries but are recorded as noncontributing elements.

The Virginia Department of Historic Resources staff actively seeks the early participation of owners in the registration process. Department staff appraises owners and local officials, as well as owners of adjacent properties, of any proposed nomination. This written notification is required by state law (see Evaluation Process and Nomination Process).

A district will not be registered if a majority of owners object to its listing (see Rights of Owners to Comment and/or Object to Listing in the National Register and the Virginia Landmarks Register). Single properties within the district, however, whether contributing or noncontributing, cannot be excluded solely because of owner objection.

Before nominating a district, please contact the appropriate regional office for guidance concerning requirements for surveys, electronic data entries, and notifications.

Local Historic Preservation Ordinances

The Code of Virginia authorizes any local government to adopt a historic preservation ordinance as part of the local land use and planning process. Adopting such an ordinance follows public hearings and comment by local citizens. The ordinance generally includes the following elements:

- definition of terms;
- a provision for district overlay zoning;
- criteria for inclusion;
- provision for a professional board to review proposed changes to historic properties;
- conditions under which proposed changes may be permitted or denied;
- standards for such changes.

Using its own criteria, a community may create a local district with boundaries that differ from, or are even independent of, National Register of Historic Places or Virginia Landmarks Register district boundaries.

Nearly 100 Virginia cities, towns, and counties have adopted local historic preservation ordinances. A number of these localities have applied for federal status as Certified Local Governments (see Glossary) and been so named by the Secretary of the Interior. With this certification, localities can apply for grants to assist in local historic resource survey, planning, and rehabilitation projects.

It is only through local historic preservation ordinances that owners may be restricted in the use of their property. Local preservation ordinances often prohibit changing (including tearing down) the outside of historic properties without review and approval by a local review board. There are no such restrictions in either the National Historic Preservation Act or the Code of Virginia, which govern the National Register of Historic Places and the Virginia Landmarks Register, respectively.

Benefits of Registration

Each owner of a single property listed in the Virginia Landmarks Register may purchase a 7" x 8" aluminum plaque for the Virginia Historic Landmark. A 14" x 16" plaque may be ordered for each historic district.

Each owner of an individually registered property also receives an official certificate of appreciation signed by the Governor of Virginia and the State Historic Preservation Officer.

From time to time, the Virginia Department of Historic Resources publishes The Virginia Landmarks Register, a book filled with photographs and descriptions of properties and districts throughout the state. It is the official work of the register program and will include your property. Interim listings appear in the department's journal, Notes on Virginia.

Listing in the National Register of Historic Places and the Virginia Landmarks Register may qualify property owners for these benefits administered by the department:

- technical assistance with repair and maintenance and rehabilitation projects;
- federal and state tax incentives for the appropriate rehabilitation of qualifying properties;
- the opportunity to grant a preservation easement to the Virginia Board of Historic Resources, which ensures preservation of the property, and to receive possible tax benefits (real estate and donation).

Listing can help reinvigorate commercial and residential areas by preserving the spirit and character that make them special places. Over the long run, preservation can help maintain the economic vitality of a community. In urban centers, many downtown historic districts flourish with a balance of old and new. The act of registration itself encourages owners and neighboring owners to maintain their properties, thereby keeping property values stable and making an area a desirable place in which to live or work.

Most of all, listing in the National Register of Historic Places informs the local, state, and federal governments that a historic resource exists. Federal agencies are required to consider the effects of their actions on historic resources. In keeping with Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act, if a federal project is proposed, it must be reviewed by the State Historic Preservation Officer for any potential effect on properties listed in, or eligible for listing in, the National Register. The review ensures that before any federal undertaking, the federal agency involved will consult with the State Historic Preservation Officer to see whether there is a way to carry out the project without affecting the property. Under the act only consultation and consideration—not preservation—are required.

The decision to proceed with the project rests with the lead federal agency. Listing in the National Register can speed up the review process by providing information to the federal agency at the beginning of the project.

A similar review takes place for those state agency actions requiring an environmental assessment (in certain circumstances when state funds or permits are required to execute a project) or when an agency wishes to alter or tear down a state-owned historic property.

The Project Review staff at the Virginia Department of Historic Resources reviews thousands of Section 106 and state projects annually. Reviews must be completed within 30 days. Only a small percentage of these reviews involve historic resources.

Process

Evaluation of Eligibility for the Registers in Virginia

The complete registration process consists of two parts: evaluation and nomination.

The evaluation process typically begins when a property owner requests it, when a federal project is reviewed, or at the conclusion of a resource survey conducted in cooperation with a local government. During evaluation, Virginia Department of Historic Resources staff and the State Review Board study the proposed historic resource. They decide whether or not it meets the criteria for listing in the National Register of Historic Places and the Virginia Landmarks Register.

The Department of Historic Resources staff developed a Preliminary Information Form as part of the evaluation process, to assess whether a property or district meets the registration criteria. The department's regional office staffs will send Preliminary Information Forms and information about the process on request (see Virginia Department of Historic Resources Regional Offices and Service Areas). Regional office staff members will answer any questions about completing the form.

The State Review Board, which meets periodically throughout the year, will review the form, taking into consideration the recommendations of the department's National Register Evaluation committee. The board's approval of a Preliminary Information Form signals the applicant may prepare a National Register nomination.

Any interested person or group may submit a Preliminary Information Form for a property. It must be accompanied by the name and address of the owner or owners of the property. The department will only consider a Preliminary Information Form after notifying the owner or owners, the applicant, and local officials. Updates are sent noting the progress of the evaluation process.

For a detailed outline of the evaluation process, see page 17.

The decision that a resource meets the criteria does not automatically result in a listing in either register. The evaluation process serves a number of purposes:

- saves owners of properties not eligible for the registers the effort of preparing a nomination;
- assists federal and state agencies in complying with Section 106 Review process;
- can serve as a focus for community efforts to list a local historic district;
- assures applicants that the boards are likely to approve the listing of properties on the registers in the Nomination Process (see next section);
- adds to the body of knowledge in the Department of Historic Resources archives and helps define a context for the historic resources within a community.

Register Nomination Process in Virginia

The Department of Historic Resources staff works with the applicant to complete a National Register of Historic Places form that meets standards set by the National Park Service. The form is used to nominate resources to both the National Register of Historic Places and the Virginia Landmarks Register.

The department's regional office staffs will send National Register nomination forms and information about the process on request (see Virginia Department of Historic Resources Regional Offices and Service Areas). Regional office staff members will answer questions about completing the form, and will forward finished forms to the department's central office.

Anyone may submit a National Register nomination for a resource to the appropriate regional office. He or she must supply the name and address of the site's owner or owners, as well as the names and addresses of any owners of property adjacent to the area to be listed. The department strongly recommends, but does not require, that the resource be evaluated to see that it meets the criteria set by the National Park Service before beginning the nomination process. A property that does not meet these criteria will not be listed in the registers (see Evaluation of Eligibility for the Registers in Virginia).

The regional office staff reviews drafts of a nomination and gives advice on how to research a resource and meet the rigorous Park Service standards of documentation. The department arranges for the nomination to be presented to the State Review Board. At the meeting, the board will vote to approve or reject the nomination. Once the board approves the form, it instructs the State Historic Preservation Officer to send the form to Washington, D.C., for listing in the National Register of Historic Places. The staff also takes the form to the Virginia Board of Historic Resources, which places the resource on the Virginia Landmarks Register.

The National Register process in Virginia ensures careful, professional review of the records on a property before it can be listed in the registers. It also is designed to encourage the full participation of property owners.

Pursuant to the requirements of state and federal law, the department informs all interested parties that listing in the registers is being considered. The department notifies the owner or owners of a property, the local officials of the city or county where the property is located, and owners of property adjacent to the proposed boundary of the area under consideration. The department also informs owners of their right to object to a property's listing in the registers. In the case of historic districts, the department sends letters to every property owner in and adjacent to the proposed district, publishes legal notices in the local newspaper and holds a public hearing in the area. For a detailed outline of the evaluation process, see page 17.

Evaluation Process

1. Applicant requests, completes, and submits Preliminary Information Form (PIF) with all supporting materials, including names and addresses of property owners, current photographs, map, and names and addresses of local officials, to the appropriate Virginia Department of Historic Resources (DHR) regional office where the property is located (see Regional Offices and Service Areas). Do not send PIF or any associated materials to the Richmond office.
2. Regional office staff members review PIF for completeness; applicant supplies additional information if needed.
3. Regional office staff forwards complete PIF package to central office in Richmond.
4. Central office register staff notifies the property owner and applicant that PIF has been received; also notifies local officials that DHR National Register Evaluation Committee will consider whether the property meets register criteria at an upcoming meeting.
5. If the committee is unable to make a recommendation based on the information submitted, it may request additional information. The committee will reconsider the PIF after the applicant has submitted the information requested.
6. After the committee has reviewed the PIF based on National Park Service criteria for eligibility, DHR staff notifies the owner, applicant, and local officials of the department's intention to present its recommendation to the State Review Board.
7. Thirty days before the State Review Board meeting, DHR staff sends a letter to the owner and applicant announcing the date and location of the meeting. In the case of a historic district, DHR staff will notify the sponsor and applicant of the date and location of the meeting.
8. Two weeks before the State Review Board meeting, DHR staff sends to each member of the board copies of all PIFs to be considered so members may review the forms before the meeting.
9. State Review Board meetings are open to the public. Interested parties may make presentations to the board at the discretion of the National Register Program Manager and the board chairman. Staff recommendations are presented with the PIFs.
10. The board may agree or disagree with staff recommendations. The board will find that the property does or does not meet the register criteria by a simple majority vote of the members present.

11. If the board is unable to complete an evaluation based on the information submitted, it may request additional information. The State Review Board will reconsider the PIF at a later meeting after the applicant has submitted the information requested.
12. DHR staff sends a letter to the owner and applicant reporting the decision of the State Review Board.
13. The DHR archivist files the PIF in the department archives, completing the evaluation process. The National Register Evaluation Committee will, on request, reconsider the evaluation if it receives additional information on the property.
14. The evaluation process ascertains which Virginia properties are eligible for registration, but does not result in the listing of a property on the Virginia Landmarks Register or the National Register for Historic Places. Applicants seeking to list a property on the register must complete the register nomination process.

Nomination Process

In the nomination process, Virginia Department of Historic Resources (DHR) regional office staff members review National Register nomination drafts prepared by the applicant to ensure that the nomination meets the standards set by the National Park Service. The National Register nomination is used to nominate properties to both the National Register of Historic Places and the Virginia Landmarks Register. Although any person may propose a nomination to the register, properties may not be listed in the National Register over the objection of the owner, or, in the case of a historic district, a majority of the owners. The department actively seeks the early participation of owners in the registration process, which may take six to 18 months to complete.

The Process

1. Applicant completes and submits to the regional office a typed, double-spaced first draft of the nomination with all required supporting materials, including completed forms, photographs, site plan, owner-of-record form, and names and addresses of property owners and adjacent property owners.
2. Regional office staff returns the draft to the applicant with comments and requests for any additional information or materials needed to complete the nomination.
3. Regional office staff reviews subsequent drafts and communicates with applicant to develop a technically correct and historically accurate nomination.
4. Once regional office staff determines that the National Register nomination is complete, it is forwarded to the National Register Manager in the DHR central office in Richmond. The nomination will be placed on the agenda of the earliest meeting of the State Review Board and Board of Historic Resources that allows DHR to meet its notification responsibilities: 30-DAY NOTICE for most individually eligible properties, 60-DAY NOTICE for historic districts to allow for information meeting and 60-DAY NOTICE for any property within the jurisdiction of a Certified Local Government.
5. For individually eligible properties, DHR staff sends a letter to the owner, applicant, and chief elected local official 30 days prior to the State Review Board and Board of Historic Resources meeting. The letter informs them of the meeting date and location and the rights of owners to comment or object to listing in the National Register of Historic Places and the Virginia Landmarks Register. Notice of the date and location of the meeting is also sent to owners of properties adjacent to the property proposed for listing. In the case of a historic district, DHR publishes legal notices in the local paper and holds an informational meeting more than 30 days in advance of the board meeting so that residents have the opportunity to ask questions about the register programs and process. The department also notifies by letter each owner of property within and adjacent to the proposed district, as well as the chief elected local official, informing them of the dates and sites of the information meeting and the State Review Board and Board of Historic Resources meeting.
6. A Certified Local Government participates in the process more actively than other local governments. Sixty days before the nomination of a property within the jurisdiction of a Certified Local Government is submitted to the State Review Board, notification letters and copies of the National Register nomination are sent to local officials and the chairperson of the Architectural Review Board established by the Certified Local Government. The State Review Board considers at its meeting any comments submitted by these Certified Local Government officials.

7. Two weeks prior to the State Review Board and Board of Historic Resources meeting, the department sends to each board member copies of all National Register nominations to be considered.
8. State Review Board and Board of Historic Resources meetings are open to the public. Interested parties may make presentations to the boards at the discretion of the chairpersons. Department staff briefly present the nominations to members of the State Review Board and Board of Historic Resources.
9. The boards may defer consideration of the nomination and request additional information.
10. If the State Review Board accepts the nomination, it recommends that the State Historic Preservation Officer or designee sign it and forward it to the Keeper of the National Register of Historic Places in Washington, D.C. If the Board of Historic Resources accepts the nomination, it lists the property on the Virginia Landmarks Register at that time. If a majority of property owners objects, however, the property will not be listed. After the meeting, DHR staff informs all property owners by letter of the boards' recommendations.
11. Department staff forwards each signed nomination to the Keeper.
12. The National Park Service, on receipt of the nomination, logs it in. At the end of a 45-day review period, the National Park Service informs DHR that the property has been listed on the National Register of Historic Places, and DHR staff notifies each property owner by letter. If the Keeper cannot list the property because of a problem with the documentation, DHR staff seeks to resolve the issue to bring about the property's listing. In the case of owner objection, if the Keeper determines that the property is eligible for listing, the documentation will be accepted and the property determined eligible but not listed.
13. If the State Review Board does not accept the nomination because it concludes that the property does not meet the criteria for listing, the applicant may appeal to the Keeper for review and approval of the nomination.

Questions and Answers

Do I have to open my property to the public if it's registered?

No. Listing in the National Register of Historic Places or the Virginia Landmarks Register does not require that you open your house to the public.

Will registration or listing increase or decrease my property values and tax burden?

Many factors affect the value of real estate: location; improvements, supply and demand, zoning, surroundings, local and national economic conditions, business cycles, and actions of national, state, and local governments. Changes in any of these factors may affect the value of property. The experience of the Virginia Department of Historic Resources has been that in times of economic prosperity (other factors being equal), owners of historic properties sometimes are concerned that listing may drive up values and taxes. Conversely, when downturns occur in the business cycle, some property owners fear that listing may drive down values. Much of the evidence for either case is anecdotal rather than statistical, and until recently there have been few studies of the effect, if any, of listing. In 1991, the General Assembly asked the department to conduct such a study. The department wrote to local commissioners of revenue and asked them to compare the changes in assessed values of properties in and outside districts over the long term. Nearly all who responded wrote that there was no significant difference in assessed values in rural areas. In urban districts, however, the value of properties rose over time at a significantly greater rate than similar properties outside the districts. This was confirmed by a study of Fredericksburg. From 1971 to 1990, residential property values in the Fredericksburg historic district rose an average of 674 percent compared to an increase of 410 percent for properties outside the district. Commercial property values rose 480 percent within the district compared with 280 percent for sites outside the district.

Can a property be nominated individually if it's within a district?

Yes. However, property owners in districts already are potentially eligible to receive the same benefits as owners of individually listed properties. In other words, if a property is listed as a contributing structure within the district, it is already "just as registered" as if it were listed individually.

Mount Vernon, Fairfax County

How much information is needed to complete a nomination?

It is not necessary to write a thesis to be successful. Rather, the object of the nomination is to document the case for eligibility. The descriptive part must contain enough information to present a clear image in words of the current physical condition of the resource. The historical narrative must justify the selected criteria by placing the resource within the context of its time. Department regional office staff will provide advice to ensure that the case for listing is made and that the documentation is thorough but not excessive.

Can vinyl-sided buildings be registered?

Yes. Although vinyl siding is not a recommended treatment for historic buildings (it conceals the historic fabric and may damage it through moisture retention), the national and state registers do not exclude vinyl-sided buildings from consideration.

How are decisions made about what gets listed?

The process consists of evaluation and nomination. During the evaluation phase, preliminary information about the property is examined by the Department of Historic Resources regional office staff and the National Register Evaluation committee, which then recommends to the State Review Board properties it considers to meet the criteria for registration (see National Register Criteria for Evaluation). Once the evaluation phase is completed, the nomination phase usually results in the listing of these qualified properties.

Isn't it true that only sites associated with famous people or events get registered?

No. The criteria (see National Register Criteria for Evaluation) apply to places of national, state, or local significance. Many places listed in the registers exemplify themes or architectural styles important in national, state, or local history.

Don't historic buildings and archaeological sites stop a lot of government projects like highways and water systems that are important for many people?

No. There are no laws or regulations concerning historic structures or sites that stop or prevent the construction of federal, state, or local government projects. The consultation process mandated by Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act only requires that federal agencies consider whether the project may have an effect on a historic resource. If so, the agencies may consider lessening or mitigating that effect. There is nothing in this process that prohibits the construction of, improvements to, or maintenance of, the roads, bridges, water systems, and other infrastructure built and maintained by state or federal agencies or utility companies. Likewise, the listing of an element of the infrastructure—a scenic byway, bridge, or tunnel, for example—in the National Register of Historic Places does not excuse an agency of government from its statutory obligations to maintain or improve it as needed for the public welfare.

If my property is listed in the national or state registers, will it be protected from undesirable development or destruction by government projects?

No. Listing or registration informs owners, local planners, government agencies, and others involved in land-use planning of the existence of a historic resource. Neither the National Historic Preservation Act nor the Code of Virginia, however, requires property owners, developers, or government agencies to avoid affecting or destroying historic resources. Even after the Section 106 consultation process is completed, in most cases the federal or state project proceeds even if it affects or destroys the resource. On rare occasions, the force of public opinion may persuade developers or government agencies to spare the resource, but that outcome usually depends on negotiations reached outside the Section 106 process.

Will anyone be able to stop me if I want to alter or tear down my property once it's listed?

No, with only a few exceptions and not because of listing on the registers. A local historic preservation ordinance may require a property owner to follow the local architectural review process before receiving a construction or demolition permit, whether or not the property is listed on the state or national registers. If a property owner donates a historic preservation easement on the property, receives federal or state tax credits, or accepts a federal or state rehabilitation grant, then certain restrictions on alterations or demolitions will apply. Most often, however, only local building codes and permit requirements must be satisfied, as with any property.

Will I be able to leave my property to my children or to anyone I want if it is listed?

Yes. Listing in the national or state registers in no way affects the transfer of property from one owner to another, or any other rights or responsibilities of property ownership.

My property is included within the boundaries of a historic district even though my house is too new to be historic. Why can't I just be left out of the district?

The concept of a district precludes its looking like a doughnut or a slice of Swiss cheese. The boundaries of a district are drawn to include the highest concentration of resources that contribute to the significance of the district, but there will often be properties within the district that do not contribute to it. (Similarly, a historic farm complex is likely to have modern structures that do not contribute to the significance of the complex.) These properties are included within the district boundary but are recorded as noncontributing.

Benefits of Listing in the National Register of Historic Places

Federal Rehabilitation Tax Credits

The owner of a property listed in the National Register of Historic Places may qualify for a federal rehabilitation tax credit. The credit is equal to 20 percent of the owner's cost of rehabilitating listed commercial and residential buildings. To qualify, the properties must be income-producing; for instance, a dwelling used solely as the owner's residence would be ineligible.

Another rehabilitation tax credit, totaling 10 percent, is available only for certain non-historic commercial buildings constructed before 1936. The buildings must be located in historic districts listed on the National Register, but they must also be noncontributing to the district. Historic buildings in the district are not eligible for this tax credit.

All rehabilitations must adhere to the Secretary of the Interior's Standards for Rehabilitation.

For details, please contact the Rehabilitation Tax Credit program manager at the Virginia Department of Historic Resources central office in Richmond (804) 367-2323.

Federal Rehabilitation Grants

Federal grants may be available for the rehabilitation of historic buildings. All rehabilitations must adhere to the Secretary of the Interior's Standards for Rehabilitation.

For details, please contact the Virginia Department of Historic Resources central office in Richmond (804) 367-2323.

Benefits of Listing in the Virginia Landmarks Register

State Rehabilitation Tax Credits

The owner of a property that is eligible for or listed in the Virginia Landmarks Register may qualify for a state rehabilitation tax credit. The credit is equal to 25 percent of the owner's cost of rehabilitating eligible or listed residential or commercial buildings, whether or not the buildings are income-producing.

Owners of buildings that are contributing components of historic districts listed on the Virginia Landmarks Register also may be eligible for the tax credit.

All rehabilitations must adhere to the Secretary of the Interior's Standards for Rehabilitation.

For details, please contact the Rehabilitation Tax Credit program manager at the Virginia Department of Historic Resources central office in Richmond (804) 367-2323.

State Rehabilitation Grants

State grants may be available for the rehabilitation of historic buildings. All rehabilitations must adhere to the Secretary of the Interior's Standards for Rehabilitation.

For details, please contact the Virginia Department of Historic Resources central office in Richmond (804) 367-2323.

Rights of Owners to Comment or Object to Listing in the National Register and the Virginia Landmarks Register

Owners of private properties nominated to the National Register have an opportunity to agree with or object to listing in accord with the National Historic Preservation Act and 36 CFR 60. Any owner or partial owner of private property who chooses to object to listing may submit to the State Historic Preservation Officer a notarized statement certifying that the party is the sole or partial owner of the private property and objects to listing. Owners of public property, such as government entities, do not have the right to object under the regulations governing the National Register.

Each owner or partial owner has one vote regardless of the portion of the property that the party owns. If a majority of private property owners objects, the property will not be listed. The State Historic Preservation Officer shall, however, submit the nomination to the Keeper of the National Register for a determination of eligibility of the property for listing in the National Register. If the property is determined to be eligible for listing, the documentation will be accepted and the property termed eligible, but not listed. This determination will speed up any subsequent Section 106 Review wherein a federal agency is required to give the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation the opportunity to comment before the agency may fund, license, or assist a project that will affect the property.

Under state law, owners of both public and private properties under consideration for listing in the Virginia Landmarks Register have the opportunity to agree with or object to listing in the Virginia Landmarks Register.

A single notarized letter may serve to certify the owner's objection to the listing of the same property in both the Virginia Landmarks Register and the National Register of Historic Places.

To object to the listing of a property, a notarized objection must be submitted by the owner to the State Historic Preservation Officer, Virginia Department of Historic Resources, 2801 Kensington Avenue, Richmond, VA 23221, before the scheduled meeting of the State Review Board.

To comment on the nomination of a property to the National Register or the Virginia Landmarks Register, please write to the State Historic Preservation Officer, Virginia Department of Historic Resources, 2801 Kensington Avenue, Richmond, VA 23221, before the State Review Board considers the nomination.

A copy of the nomination and information on the National Register and the Federal Tax Provisions are available from the above address upon request.

Glossary

Advisory Council on Historic Preservation	An independent federal agency, the council itself is composed of 19 members: a chairman, vice-chairman, six private citizens, a governor, and a mayor—all appointed by the President of the United States—as well as the Secretaries of the Interior and of Agriculture, the heads of four other federal agencies, the Architect of the Capitol, the Chairman of the National Trust for Historic Preservation, and the President of the National Conference of State Historic Preservation Officers. The council members meet four or five times a year. The day-to-day business of the council involving Section 106 Review is conducted by the executive director and a professional staff of historians, architects, archaeologists, community planners, lawyers, and administrative personnel.
Area of Significance	The aspect of history a property represents that makes it eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places, such as agriculture, industry, architecture, or engineering. A property may meet the criteria under more than one area of significance.
Building	A resource, such as a house, barn, store, factory, or warehouse, that shelters some form of human activity.
Certified Local Government	A local government, as it identifies and evaluates historic resources and plans for their protection, can expand this work through the Certified Local Government program. Certified Local Government program participants become partners with the Department of Historic Resources in the national historic preservation program and can apply for federal grants to carry out their preservation projects. To take part in the program, a local government must first meet special requirements set by the department and the National Park Service.
Contributing resource	A building, site, structure, or object that adds to the historic significance of a property or district.
Criteria	Standards set by the National Park Service by which it determines the eligibility of a resource for the National Register of Historic Places. The Virginia Board of Historic Resources has adopted these same standards to evaluate a resource for the Virginia Landmarks Register.
Criteria Considerations	Additional eligibility standards set for certain kinds of properties, such as cemeteries, reconstructed or relocated buildings or structures, or properties less than 50 years old.
Determination of Eligibility	An action by the Keeper of the National Register through which the eligibility of a property for National Register listing is confirmed but the property is not actually listed. Nominating authorities and federal agency officials commonly request determinations of eligibility for federal planning purposes and in cases where a majority of private owners have objected to National Register listing.
Historic	Related to the known or recorded past.

Historic Context	A compilation of information about historic properties that share a common theme, geographic area, and time period. The development of this information serves as a foundation for decisions about the identification, evaluation, registration, and treatment of historic properties, as well as for planning purposes.
Historic District	A significant concentration or continuity of sites, buildings, structures, or objects united historically or aesthetically by plan or physical development. See specific type—Local Ordinance Historic District, National Historic Landmark District, National Register Historic District, or Virginia Landmarks Register District.
Historic Resource	Any prehistoric or historic district, building, site, structure, or object; specifically, any such resource that is listed in or meets the criteria for listing in the National Register of Historic Places.
Identification	Process through which information about historic properties is gathered.
Integrity	The unimpaired authenticity of a property's historic or prehistoric identity, evidenced by surviving physical characteristics.
Level of Significance	Geographic magnitude or scope of a property's historic significance: national, state, or local.
Listing	The formal entry of a property in the National Register of Historic Places or the Virginia Landmarks Register.
Local Ordinance Historic District	Designation by local governments, generally through a zoning ordinance recognizing and protecting a building or group of buildings from unnecessary destruction or insensitive alteration to the exterior. Historic district zoning at the local level is carried out in a manner consistent with other zoning actions and is the only designation that regulates the property owner's use of the property. Local zoning decisions rest entirely with the local government and are made independently of any listing of properties on the National Register of Historic Places or the Virginia Landmarks Register. In addition, the criteria for local district designation may be different from those for listing on the registers. Localities may offer tax or other preservation incentives to owners of designated properties.

Multiple property documentation Format through which historic properties related by theme, general geographic area, and period of time may be documented as a group and listed in the National Register of Historic Places.

National Historic Landmark A program providing official federal recognition of nationally significant properties. There is no regulation of private or non-federal actions affecting National Historic Landmarks. Federal projects affecting a National Historic Landmark will go through Section 106 Review. The Department of the Interior provides Congress annually with a list of all threatened National Historic Landmarks. This designation places no restrictions on the private property owner.

National Historic Landmark District Official federal recognition of a group of historic resources determined to be nationally significant. This designation places no restrictions on the private owners of property within the district.

National Historic Preservation Act of 1966 As amended – federal legislation establishing the National Register of Historic Places and extending the national historic preservation programs to properties of state and local significance.

National Register Historic District A group of historically related resources meeting the established criteria for eligibility and significant at the national, state, or local level. A public hearing is always held prior to the listing of a district on the register. A district may contain both contributing and noncontributing resources. Individual properties may not be excluded within the boundaries of the historic district, but a majority of owners objecting to the listing may prevent the listing of a district on the register. This designation places no restrictions on the private owners of property within the district.

National Register of Historic Places The official federal list of districts, sites, buildings, structures, and objects significant in American history, architecture, archaeology, engineering, and culture. This federal program is administered by the National Park Service and coordinated in Virginia by the Department of Historic Resources. A privately owned historic property will not be listed if the owner objects or, in the case of historic districts, if a majority of the owners object. Owners of public property, such as government entities, do not have the right to object under the regulations governing the National Register. This designation places no restrictions on the owners of listed property.

Rice House, Richmond

Nomination The document that proposes a property for listing in the National Register of Historic Places, and, in Virginia, for the Virginia Landmarks Register as well.

Noncontributing A building, site, structure, or object that does not add to the historic significance of a property or district.

Object A construction primarily artistic in nature or relatively small in scale and simply constructed, such as a statue or milepost.

Overlay Zoning In this context, local zoning for historic preservation purposes that is "laid over" existing land use zones; its regulations apply in addition to existing land use regulations.

Period of Significance The span of time during which a property attained the significance that makes it eligible for the National Register of Historic Places.

Prehistoric Related to the period before recorded history.

Preliminary Information Form Preliminary application to the National Register of Historic Places that is used to evaluate whether or not a property meets the criteria for listing on the registers.

Preservation Easement A legal document in which the property owner and the Department of Historic Resources on behalf of the state enter into a legal agreement that grants the state specific rights to the property, including restrictions against inappropriate change and development. As a means of perpetual protection of a historic resource, the donation of a preservation easement is considered a charitable contribution for federal tax purposes. Properties listed in the Virginia Landmarks Register or deemed contributing within a listed historic district qualify for easement protection. Such protection may afford the property owner tax credit benefits and relief from local real property taxes.

Registration Process by which a historic property is documented and nominated or determined to meet the criteria for listing in the National Register and the Virginia Landmarks Register.

Section 106 Review The federal review process established by Congress as part of the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966 to ensure that before any federal or federally funded or licensed project goes forward, the effect of the project on any historic resources will be assessed. This review takes place in the course of all federal undertakings regardless of whether or not the property is listed in the register. Registration does not "trigger" the review process; the federal undertaking triggers it. The review does not terminate projects, but requires consideration of alternatives to the destruction of historic properties. Complete regulations for the review process appear in the Code of Federal Regulations, 36 CFR Part 800.

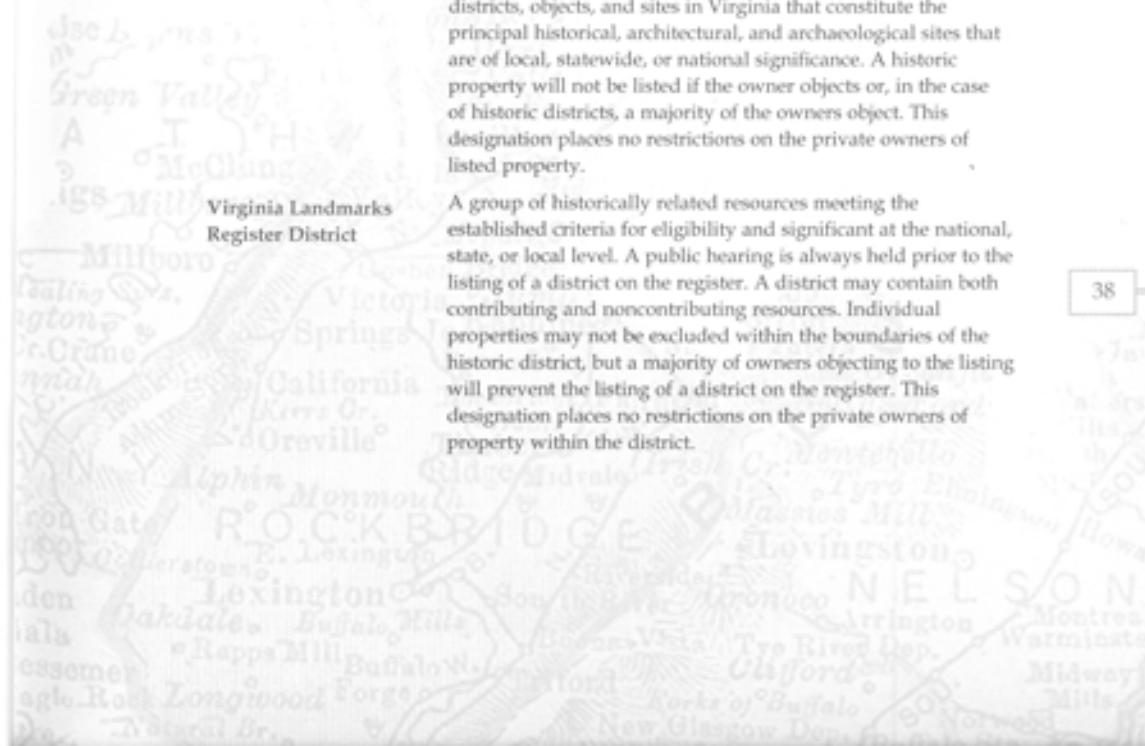

Significance See Area of Significance, Level of Significance, Period of Significance.

Site	Location of a significant event, a prehistoric or historic occupation or activity, or a building or structure, whether standing, ruined, or vanished, where the location itself possesses significance independent of the value of any existing structure at that location.
State Historic Preservation Office (SHPO)	The office in state or territorial government that administers the preservation programs under the National Historic Preservation Act.
State Historic Preservation Officer	The official designated in each state and appointed by the governor to administer the programs created by the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966, as amended. He or she signs National Register nominations and forwards them to the register staff at the National Park Service in Washington, D.C.
State Review Board (full, formal name: Virginia State Historic Preservation Office Review Board)	A board appointed by the State Historic Preservation Officer for the purpose of reviewing and approving or disapproving all non-federal nominations to the National Register of Historic Places. The board also confirms that the criteria have been met for all federal nominations of Virginia properties to the National Register. It recommends to the State Historic Preservation Officer whether Preliminary Information Forms meet the criteria for nomination to the National Register and the Virginia Landmarks Register. These reviews take place before the State Historic Preservation Officer submits the nominations to the Keeper of the National Register. The board reviews the department's state historic preservation plan prior to submission to the Secretary of the Interior and provides general advice and guidance to the State Historic Preservation Office.
Statement of Significance	Section of the nomination form that states and explains the reasons a property meets the criteria for listing in the National Register and the Virginia Landmarks Register.
Structure	A functional resource constructed for purposes other than to provide shelter, such as a bridge, windmill, or silo.

Technical Assistance	Advice or recommendations made by the staff of the State Historic Preservation Office to persons outside the office; for example, advice on preservation treatments of historic sites and structures.
Theme	A trend or pattern in history or prehistory relating to a particular aspect of cultural development, such as dairy farming or coal mining.
Virginia Board of Historic Resources	Formerly the Virginia Historic Landmarks Commission, the board is composed of members appointed by the Governor of Virginia in consultation with agencies and organizations in the state that have as their purpose the study of Virginia's history and the preservation of Virginia's historic, architectural, archaeological, and cultural resources. The board is empowered to place and to remove properties from the Virginia Landmarks Register that have not retained the characteristics for which they were originally designated, to endorse appropriate practices for the care and management of designated landmarks, to approve the text for and manufacture of highway historical markers, to acquire by purchase or gift designated landmarks or sites, or easements or interests in designated landmarks, to review the programs and services of the Department of Historic Resources, and to comment on the department's effectiveness to the director of the department and to the Governor of Virginia.
Virginia Landmarks Register	A program established by the General Assembly in 1966 and administered by the Virginia Department of Historic Resources for the designation of historic landmarks, buildings, structures, districts, objects, and sites in Virginia that constitute the principal historical, architectural, and archaeological sites that are of local, statewide, or national significance. A historic property will not be listed if the owner objects or, in the case of historic districts, a majority of the owners object. This designation places no restrictions on the private owners of listed property.
Virginia Landmarks Register District	A group of historically related resources meeting the established criteria for eligibility and significant at the national, state, or local level. A public hearing is always held prior to the listing of a district on the register. A district may contain both contributing and noncontributing resources. Individual properties may not be excluded within the boundaries of the historic district, but a majority of owners objecting to the listing will prevent the listing of a district on the register. This designation places no restrictions on the private owners of property within the district.

National Register and Virginia Landmarks Register Criteria for Evaluation

The quality of significance in American history, architecture, archaeology, engineering, and culture is present in districts, sites, buildings, structures, and objects that possess integrity of location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association; and that meet one or more of the following criteria:

- Criterion A: Properties that are associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history.
- Criterion B: Properties that are associated with the lives of persons significant in our past.
- Criterion C: Properties that embody the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction or that represent a significant and distinguishable entity whose components may lack individual distinction.
- Criterion D: Properties that have yielded, or may be likely to yield, information important in prehistory or history.

Crystal Spring Steam Pump, Roanoke

Criteria Considerations (Exceptions)

Ordinarily, cemeteries, birthplaces or graves of historical figures, properties owned by religious institutions or used for religious purposes, structures that have been moved from their original locations, reconstructed historic buildings, properties primarily commemorative in nature, and properties that have achieved significance within the past 50 years shall not be considered eligible for the registers. However, such properties will qualify if they are integral parts of districts that do meet the criteria or if they fall within the following categories:

- A. a religious property deriving primary significance from architectural or artistic distinction or historical importance; or
- B. a building or structure removed from its original location but which is significant primarily for architectural value, or which is the surviving structure most importantly associated with a historic person or event; or
- C. a birthplace or grave of a historical figure of outstanding importance if there is no other appropriate site or building directly associated with his or her productive life; or
- D. a cemetery which derives its primary significance from graves of persons of transcendent importance, from distinctive design features, or from association with historic events; or
- E. a reconstructed building when accurately executed in a suitable environment and presented in a dignified manner as part of a restoration master plan, and when no other building or structure with the same association has survived; or
- F. a property primarily commemorative in intent if design, age, tradition, or symbolic value has invested it with its own historical significance; or
- G. a property achieving significance within the past 50 years if it is of exceptional importance.
